

33

Ans 2

ISO is a series of standards on quality system was formulated by International organization for standardization in order to meet the requirement of internationally uniform quality system.

→ The European Nation trade has reached an understanding that the post 1992 trade transactions would be dealt only with those companies who have registered

ISO-9000 Quality System -

3 - The developed countries started producing their own standards for specifying the variety of products of manufacturers.

4 - ISO revised and issued BS-5750 in 1987 as ISO-9000 series of standards on Quality System -

ISO 14000 Series \Rightarrow The ISO 14000

family of environmental management standard, guidelines according to the present plan comprises 23 individual standard guidelines and technical report related to environment management system.

ISO 14001: Environment management system - specification with guidance for use

ISO 14004: Environment management system - non-requirement guidelines on principle, system and supporting techniques.

ISO 14010: Guidelines for environment auditing - non-requirement principle.

ISO Justifies Quality management

① Organizational Evaluation standards -

ISO 14001 entitled "Environment management system specification with guidance for use" gives the element that organization are required to conform to if they seek registration -

