

Prototyping

Prototyping is the process of creating, developing and refining a working model of the final operational system. It is a live working system and not just a paper based design. It is an engineering discipline that has found its way into computer system development, it means that the analyst system development builds small scale working model of the analyst system or sub system. It stresses the early delivery of a working system that could be used to refine user requirement & system characteristics.