

1. Compound die is the process where the die separates or blanks the part from a steel strip in one stroke. A compound die will perform multiple cuts or punches in one stroke, as compared to multiple strokes.

This is a very cost effective method for stamping medium to high volume parts while keeping labor and die costs down. Compound dies are often used to stamp simpler flat parts such as washers.