

Q3Population Growth & Economic development -

Population growth helps the process of development in certain ways and hampers it in certain other ways, This is so because the relationship between population growth and economic development is intricate complex and interacting.

One of the positive side on population growth means an increase in the supply of labour a basic factor of production and growth of population and labour supply has major source of growth in recorded history.

- ① A growing population leads to an increasing total output, but also makes for a greater number of person among whom output must be divided. There are more productive hands but also there are more mouths to feed.

② young workers are generally more productive and adaptable. Although older people may have the advantage of experience.

And young people are more production is open to contradiction (especially by their elders) or the ability of workers to move easily from one job to another is called mobility of Labour. It is particularly important in economic production also depends on the working age group. It is obviously possible to produce more goods and services and so achieve a higher standard of living.